Ashwin and Anjali Lowekar are a design duo who have been on the design scene since the last eight years in Pune and have been making waves with the architectural definition of space management. They use innovative ideas to try and utilise a large amount of space that would normally be written off as a waste or a space for dead storage. Some of these ideas have attracted a lot of attention of their peers and they have picked up a couple of awards along the way.

We see here their startlingly simple yet wonderfully useful conversion of a dead area under a staircase into a book nook. Qaneez Sukhrani was their client for this assignment and she was ecstatic at having such a wonderful increase in the area in her small and compact rowhouse at Vimannagar. If she gets a few guests too many...presto, out slides the extra seats! Now thats a big small deal!
